Marcos the Banished is the incredible true story of a man who was exiled from the human race. Born in the Philippines in 1961, Marcos was abandoned by his parents at a young age and raised by a tribe of cannibals. He was eventually rescued by missionaries and brought to the United States, where he lived for several years before being deported back to the Philippines. Marcos then spent the rest of his life living in the jungle, where he was shunned by both humans and animals. He died in 2005 at the age of 44.

Early Life

Marcos was born in the Philippines in 1961. His parents were poor farmers who could not afford to care for him. When Marcos was just a few months old, his parents abandoned him in the jungle. Marcos was found by a tribe of cannibals who took him in and raised him as one of their own.

Marcos grew up in the jungle, learning the ways of the cannibals. He ate human flesh, hunted animals, and participated in tribal rituals. Marcos was a skilled hunter and warrior, and he quickly became a respected member of the tribe.

Rescue

In 1971, a group of missionaries entered the jungle in search of converts. They came across Marcos's tribe and were horrified by what they saw. The missionaries convinced Marcos to leave the tribe and come with them.

Marcos was taken to the United States, where he lived for several years. He attended school and learned English. Marcos also converted to Christianity.

Deportation

In 1979, Marcos was deported back to the Philippines. The US government believed that Marcos was a danger to society because he had been raised by cannibals.

Marcos was returned to the jungle, where he was shunned by both humans and animals. He lived in a cave and ate whatever he could find. Marcos was often sick and hungry.

Death

Marcos died in 2005 at the age of 44. He was found dead in his cave by a group of villagers. Marcos's body was covered in sores and his stomach was empty.

Marcos the Banished is a tragic story of a man who was born into a life of violence and poverty. He was abandoned by his parents and raised by cannibals. He was rescued by missionaries and brought to the United States, but he was eventually deported back to the Philippines. Marcos spent the rest of his life living in the jungle, where he was shunned by both humans and animals. He died in 2005 at the age of 44.

Marcos's story is a reminder of the importance of family and community. It is also a reminder that even the most marginalized people can find hope and redemption.
