Character Design

The first step in creating an animated character is to design it. This involves coming up with a unique and memorable appearance for the character, as well as defining its personality and backstory. Wilson's book provides a step-by-step guide to character design, covering everything from sketching to color theory.

Animation Principles

Once you have designed your character, you need to learn the principles of animation. These principles govern the way that characters move and interact with each other. Wilson's book covers the twelve principles of animation, as well as providing tips and tricks for applying them to your own work.
