In the aftermath of World War II, three young women emerged from the shadow of their famous fathers to forge their own paths in life. Anna Roosevelt, Kathleen Harriman, and Sarah Churchill, known as the "Daughters of Yalta," shared a unique bond that would shape their personal and professional journeys.

Anna Roosevelt, the daughter of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Eleanor Roosevelt, was a tireless advocate for social justice. She worked to improve the lives of women, children, and minorities, and was a leading voice in the civil rights movement. Kathleen Harriman, the daughter of Averell Harriman and Marie Harriman, was a prominent diplomat and politician. She served as the United States Ambassador to the United Kingdom from 1961 to 1963, and was the first woman to hold that post.

Sarah Churchill, the daughter of Winston Churchill and Clementine Churchill, was a talented writer and broadcaster. She wrote several books about her father and her experiences during the war, and was a popular guest on television and radio shows. The three women were all strong and independent, and they each made significant contributions to their fields. Their stories are a testament to the power of women to overcome obstacles and achieve their dreams.
