The pink color originates from tiny fragments of coral and shells that have been eroded and deposited on the beaches over time. As the coral breaks down, it releases a substance called calcium carbonate, which gives the sand its distinctive pink tint.

Turquoise Waters: A Liquid Paradise

The turquoise waters that lap against Barbados' shores are a sight to behold. The crystal-clear visibility and vibrant hues invite you to dive into a world of marine wonders.

Barbados' waters are home to a diverse array of marine life, including colorful coral reefs teeming with tropical fish, majestic sea turtles, and playful dolphins. The warm temperatures and calm waters make snorkeling and diving unforgettable experiences.
